

Free NADA University Seminar on May 26 to Show Dealers How to Influence Shoppers with Internet Advertising

AutoTrader.com Director of Industry Relations Howard Polirer to Offer Insights, Real World Examples of Successful Online Marketing Strategies and Tactics

ATLANTA – May 25, 2010 – Consumer shopping behavior has shifted in response to recent economic changes. Consumers have become more discerning about their purchases and, as a result, they are spending more time online researching and comparing major purchases like automobiles. And savvy dealers are using the internet more and more to influence and engage shoppers.

NADA University will host a free online seminar on Wednesday, May 26 at 1 p.m. Eastern time for auto dealers looking to get the latest information, strategies and tactics for successful online marketing. AutoTrader.com's Director of Industry Relations Howard Polirer will lead the free seminar, entitled "Leveraging the Internet as an Influencing Medium," and offer his insights and expertise gained from industry best-practices, in-depth research and speaking with dealers from across the country that are effectively using the internet to move more inventory.

During the seminar, Polirer will also outline some of the changing dynamics, behaviors and expectations of shoppers in this new economy and offer examples of how to build trust with today's car buyers with effective online marketing.

Specific topics to be covered will include: Re-defining today's car shopper; understanding the role of online advertising as a stimulus to encourage a desired response; learning how to build value for car shoppers with effective merchandising techniques; and managing your online reputation through social media.

This live online seminar is offered through NADA University's MarketINSIGHT series of seminars. The seminar will begin promptly at 1 p.m.
