Lifted by a strong marketing campaign, unique visitors to the core site increased 13 percent while mobile traffic accelerated by 41%. AutoTrader.com experienced eight of its top 10 best traffic days ever in February surpassing one million unique visitors on each of those record eight days. The site reached its highest single-day traffic ever on February 20 when nearly 1.1 million unique visitors shopped for a car.

"Our goal is to connect buyers and sellers, and we are thrilled that more consumers than ever are coming to AutoTrader.com to shop for new and used vehicles," said AutoTrader.com President & CEO Chip Perry. "This is an exciting time to be in the auto industry and we look forward to continuing to play a key role in the shopping experience and by creating exceptional value for our dealer customers."

AutoTrader.com's significant marketing efforts including its strong presence at the widely televised NBA All-Star Weekend, a robust search engine marketing campaign and effective participation at auto shows contributed to the record growth.

"Our marketing partnerships, like the one we enjoy with the NBA, have proven to be well timed with the momentum of improved auto sales. Millions of consumers are also exposed to the AutoTrader.com brand at many of the nations' auto shows," said Clark Wood, Chief Marketing Officer for AutoTrader.com.

The AutoTrader.com brand was well marketed in late January and February at the auto shows in Washington DC, Chicago, Philadelphia and Cleveland.

The record number of visitors to the site was aided by a record 1.7 million consumers who visited AutoTrader.com via their mobile device. "Mobile traffic is playing an increasingly significant role in our traffic numbers as consumers download the AutoTrader.com iPhone and Android mobile apps to their smart phone devices," said Wood.

Mobile traffic now accounts for between seven and 10 percent of AutoTrader.com's monthly unique visitor traffic.
